

Global volatility steadies the climb

Cirium Fleet Forecast's latest outlook sees heady growth settling down to trend levels, with economic slowdown, rising oil prices and production rate challenges as factors

Narrowbodies including A321neo will dominate deliveries over 2019-2038

DAN THISDELL & CHRIS SEYMOUR LONDON

Anybody who has been watching the news for the past year cannot have missed some recurring headlines. In no particular order: US-China trade war, potential US-Iran hot war, US-Mexico trade tension, US-Europe trade tension, interest rates rising, Chinese growth stumbling, Europe facing populist backlash, longest economic recovery in history, US-Canada commerce friction, bond and equity markets volatile, global recession forecast. So, within the limited sphere of civil aviation, nobody will be surprised to learn that the key theme running through the airliner business today is: slowdown.

That, anyway, is the message coming from the 2019-2038 Cirium Fleet Forecast. But while by most metrics the market for commercial jets and turboprops across most sectors has come down from a run of heady growth years, slowdown in this context should be read as a return to longer-term averages. In other words, in commercial aviation, slowdown is still a long way from downturn.

And, Cirium observes, “a slowdown in growth rates should not be a surprise”. Economic indicators are showing “consistent decline” in all major regions, and the World Trade Organization’s global trade outlook is at its weakest since 2010. Putting aviation firmly into that context, Cirium adds: “With fuel comprising a quarter of airline costs, oil price volatility also continues to be a concern.”

Volatility is certainly an issue for airlines – any business is more comfortable when it can make medium-term plans based on some notion of cost stability – but absolute price is also a factor that warrants attention. After spiking above $100/barrel in mid-2014, the Brent Crude benchmark declined rapidly to a January 2016 low in the mid-$30s; the subsequent upturn peaked in the $80s a year ago. Following a long dip during the second half of 2018, oil has this year recovered to the high-$60s prevailing in July.

RECESSION WORRIES

What comes next is anybody’s guess, but it is worth noting that the sharp drop in prices that started in July 2018 corresponded roughly with broader concerns that recession – possibly global and possibly severe – looms on the horizon. News that Chinese economic growth has been at its slowest in a generation will only stoke those concerns. However, there is upward pressure, too. One investment strategist quoted by the Financial Times reckons prices are being held down by aggressive US trade policy, but expects oil to go higher, citing OPEC supply restraint, risks to production in Libya and Venezuela, and tension in Iran.

For aviation – and thus civil airliner orders and output – it amounts to much the same thing either way. All bets would be off if war breaks out in the Gulf – but even without such dramatic disruption, rising oil prices or recession would both put airline finances under severe strain, hence the relatively cautious tone of Cirium's 20-year forecast: "The airline industry continues to grow, but at a rate closer to the long-term average."

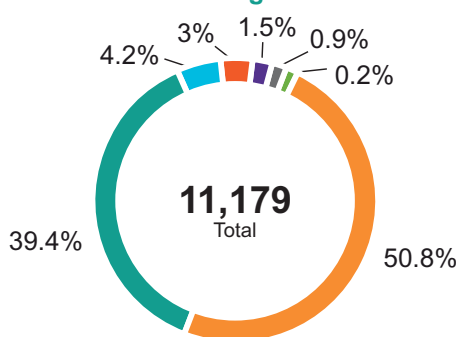

Cirium also notes that aircraft manufacturers are grappling with significant challenges. Airbus is phasing out its A380 – a move that will force the European champion to articulate and deliver a new product strategy – while it absorbs the A220, the narrowbody formerly known as Bombardier's CSeries. Airbus is also pushing its single-aisle family into new long-haul territory with the launch of its A321XLR – a programme that complicates arch-rival Boeing's launch-or-not deliberations over the New Mid-market Airplane concept, which it hopes will replicate its success with the 757 and 767. Meanwhile, Boeing is also getting ready to start testing its 777-X – all while seeking the formula that will get its 737 Max back in the air, and hence back in production and delivery.

Other players are all about change and adaptation. Bombardier is exiting both the turboprop and regional jet businesses, having sold its Q400 and CRJ programmes to Viking Air owner Longview Aviation Capital and Mitsubishi, respectively. Embraer’s regional jets business is going to Boeing. Chinese and Russian airliner projects have yet to impact markets, but development continues.

OUTPUT CONSTRAINTS

For fleets, while the firm backlog remains close to its all-time high at more than 14,000, Cirium questions any plans to boost monthly output beyond currently announced rate increases intended to take Airbus and Boeing to 63 and 57 narrowbodies per month, respectively. Those plans, it says, “do not appear to be sustainable unless traffic growth continues to be above-trend and/or retirements increase faster than forecast”.

Cirium’s long-term expectation is that traffic growth will add 25,000 aircraft to the global commercial fleet, meaning 54,500 aircraft in service at the end of 2038. Of that total, 46,800 will be passenger jets.

The global fleet will thus grow at 3.4% yearly, with the single- and twin-aisle fleets gaining 4% versus slower growth of just 2% for freighters and 1% for regional aircraft.

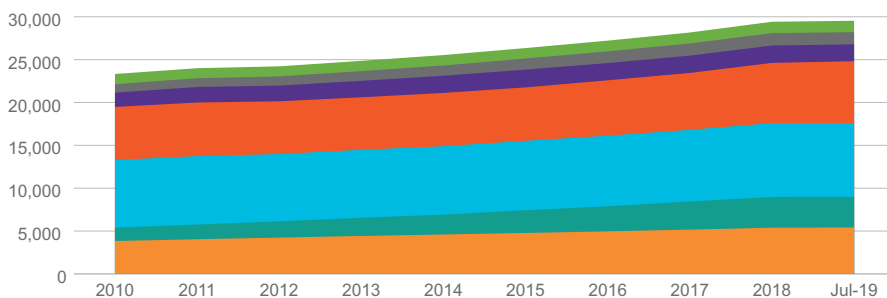

The value of all those deliveries should total $3.1 trillion, based on Ascend by Cirium’s 2019 Full-Life Base Values data. Of all deliveries, Airbus and Boeing will account for 79% of aircraft and 87% of value up to 2038. But Cirium notes this leaves $400 billion for other players. The Comac C919 and Irkut MC-21 narrowbodies could take one-quarter of that non-Airbus-Boeing market.

Overall, single-aisle jets will account for two-thirds of deliveries, but just a bit more than half of value. The core of this $1.6 trillion market will continue to be the 150-seat size typified by the A320neo and 737 Max 8. But while these centreline types will see almost twice as many deliveries as larger siblings, the bigger variants – 180-seaters like the A321neo and Max 10 – will take a growing share, of nearly a third of deliveries and 36% of value.

In the twin-aisle market, the dominant players will be the A350 and 787, with 250-300-seaters accounting for 60% of delivery value. Airbus and Boeing will essentially retain their twin-aisle duopoly through to 2038, but Cirium expects to see nearly 300 deliveries of the Sino-Russian CRAIC CRJ929 by the end of this 20-year period.

While global demand may be slowing, regional trends are expected to remain relatively stable. China is, again, forecast to be the country that takes more deliveries than any other – 19% of the total up to 2038 to service its expected traffic growth of 7%, the world’s highest. That 19% of deliveries is only topped – just – by the whole of North America. During the 20-year period, China and the rest of the Asia-Pacific region will see their share of the global fleet grow from 30% today to 41%.

Another trend that continues is development of the Middle East fleet. The region’s 5% of 20-year deliveries by volume will account for 11% by value, owing to the preponderance of twin-aisle aircraft bought by airlines there.

When reviewing our breakdown on the following pages of the current global fleet by region and carrier, it is worth noting that the figures describe aircraft in service and on order. Thus they do not reflect the more than 380 737 Max aircraft in storage as of 1 July. Also note that the 737 Max backlog is down by 250 units since December.

A change worth remarking on is that the A320neo family is now among the top 10 mainline types, with just over 500 delivered between 1 July 2018 and 30 June 2019. That top 10 group also says “goodbye” to Boeing 717/MD-80/MD-90/DC-9 – there are just 431 units left in service for these types. ■

EXPLANATORY NOTES

This census data covers all commercial jet and turboprop-powered transport aircraft in service or on firm order with airlines worldwide, excluding types that carry fewer than 14 passengers or equivalent cargo. It records the fleets of Western-, Chinese- and Russian/CIS/Ukrainian-built airliners.

The tables have been compiled using Cirium's Fleets Analyzer data. The information is correct up to July 2019 and excludes non-airline operators, such as leasing companies and the military.

Aircraft are listed in alphabetical order, first by manufacturer and then type. Operators are listed by region, with any aircraft variant in brackets next to the operator's name.

Fleet data comprises the in-service fleet and, where applicable, the outstanding firm orders in parentheses in the right-hand column.

In Fleets Analyzer, an airliner is defined as being in service if it is active (in other words accumulating flying hours).

An aircraft is classified as parked if it is known to be inactive – for example, if it is grounded because of airworthiness requirements or in storage – and when flying hours for three consecutive months are reported as zero.

Aircraft undergoing maintenance or awaiting conversion are also counted as being parked.

The region is dictated by operator base and does not necessarily indicate the area of operation.

Options and letters of intent (where a firm contract has not been signed) are not included.

Orders by, and aircraft with, leasing companies and holding companies – such as China Aviation Supplies – are excluded, unless a confirmed end-user is known. In that case, the aircraft is shown against the airline concerned. Operators' fleets include leased aircraft.
