DAN THISDELL & ROB MORRIS LONDON

For a one-word summary of the megatrend shaping the world's commercial airliner fleet, read simply "China". Our annual World Airliner Census, built on Flight Fleets Analyzer data, reveals that the distribution of the global fleet has passed a milestone. A year ago, North America – always the biggest fleet region – led the in-service jet table with 30% of the global total, ahead of the Asia-Pacific and China, with 29%. This year those percentages are reversed.

Today, Asia-Pacific, including China, commands 30% of the global passenger jet fleet, with North America at just 29%. China alone has 14%.

The movement has been dramatic. A decade ago, North America's dominant share was 36%, with Asia-Pacific and China at just 20%. The other mature market, Europe, has seen its share decline from 27% to 25% in the same period.

North America and Europe have seen their jet fleets grow by just 0.4% and 1.2% respectively per year over the past 10 years, reflecting capacity discipline and a focus on fleet replacement. During the same period, China's fleet has grown by 2,000 aircraft – an annual rate of increase of more than 11%. The rest of Asia-Pacific has added 1,500 aircraft over the decade, growing at 5.1% yearly.

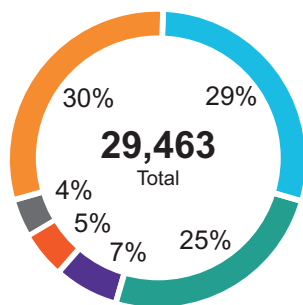

Moreover, it is worth noting that the in-service fleet per capita figure is much lower in Asia-Pacific – and also in Latin America – than in Europe and North America, highlighting the fleet potential growth of these developing regions.

In the Middle East, the jet fleet has doubled over the past 10 years and now accounts for 5% of the global total.

The outliers, in fleet percentage terms, are Africa and Russia/CIS. Africa's fleet share has decreased by a percentage point in the past several years, to 4%. In Russia/CIS, most of the Soviet-era fleet has been phased out and its share has slipped to 4% from a high of 6%.

PROBABLE TRENDS

To make sense of probable trends in fleet size and deliveries, note that global passenger capacity – measured in available seat kilometres (ASK) – has grown by 4.6% per year over the past 20 years. That annual capacity growth has been about 0.8% behind growth in passenger traffic – measured in revenue passenger kilometres. The result – attractive for airlines looking to fly full aircraft – is that passenger load factors reached historically high levels in 2017, at just over 81%.

From now, though, the 2018-2037 Flight Fleet Forecast expects load factors to increase only marginally, to around 83% in 2037. That is, capacity is set to grow more closely in line with passenger traffic. Fleets Analyzer data further predicts annual passenger capacity growth of 4.7% per year, just behind 4.8% traffic growth.

Unsurprisingly, China is forecast to show the strongest passenger capacity growth, rising by 7.5% per year in the coming 20 years. That is 0.1% lower growth than in the 2017 forecast, based on new economic predictions, but it still leaves China's fleet capacity growing at more than twice the rate of North America (3.4%) or Europe (3.2%). The rest of Asia-Pacific will see growth of 4.7%.

By 2037, Europe and North America will be roughly equal in passenger capacity, hosting just over 4 trillion ASK. Both China and the rest of Asia-Pacific will have surpassed those two most mature markets. Underscoring its growth trend, China alone will be closing the gap on the combined ASK total of the other countries in Asia-Pacific.

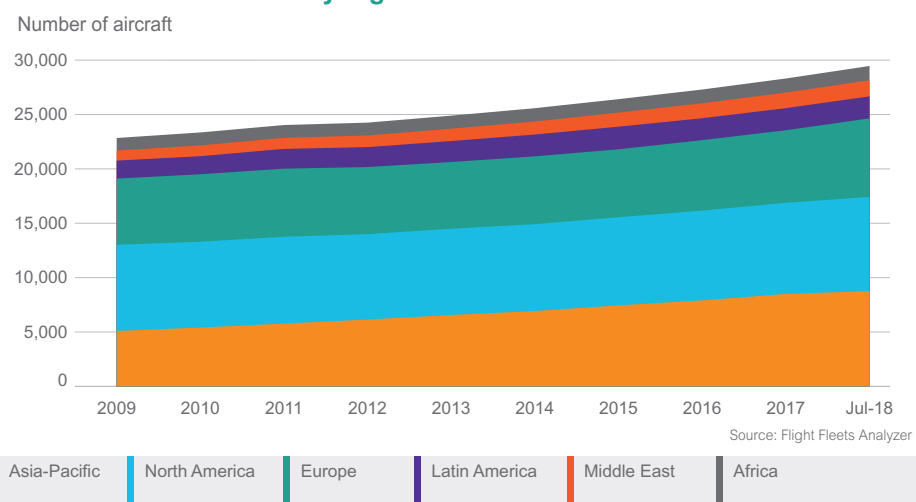

A region to watch is the Middle East, where carriers are expected to expand passenger capacity by 5.5% per year to 2037, to a little bit less than 3 trillion ASK, driven by the Gulf hubs. However, that growth rate has been downgraded by 0.3 percentage points compared with last year; with those hubs maturing, growth is easing off.

Latin American growth should remain robust, at 6.1% – down slightly on last year's forecast but still enough to roughly triple regional capacity, to about 1.6 trillion ASK. Africa (4% growth) and Russia/CIS (4.1%) will double capacity, but both will still be far off the 1 trillion ASK level by 2037.

Airliner in-service fleet by region 2009-2018

Global order backlog by region 2009-2018

Added up, the in-service passenger jet fleet should more than double, from 22,460 aircraft at the end of 2017 to nearly 45,500 in 2037.

Barely 14% – 3,000 aircraft – of the currently-serving jet fleet will be flying in 2037, so 54% of jet deliveries will be for fleet growth and the rest for replacement. The standout sector in this growth surge is single-aisle jets. Where today they account for 58% of the global passenger aircraft fleet (jets and turbo-props), by 2037 their dominance is expected to increase such that they make up 65%. Dur- >>

» ing the same period, the fleet share of twin-aisles will increase by just 1%, to 18%.

The growth of single- and twin-aisle airliners will come at the expense of regional jets and turboprops. By 2037, those types will represent just 8% and 9% respectively of the total global passenger fleet – down from around 13% each at the end of 2017.

Meanwhile, Fleets Analyzer's survey of global fleet data as of the end of July 2018 (See Census P28) throws up a few points to note. Boeing's 787 is the chart-mover to watch, having climbed over the year from ninth to seventh most-flown mainline type. With deliveries running at 11 or more per month, the Dreamliner fleet grew by one-fifth during the past 12 months.

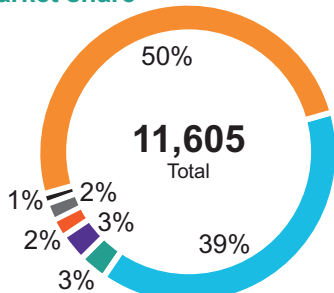

Unsurprisingly, the Airbus A320 and 737 order backlogs are now dominated by the Neo and Max updates; classic versions have virtually disappeared from the on-order lists (see pie chart below).

Gone completely is the Bombardier CRJ, because it is now known as the A220. At Airbus, the A350-800 no longer figures in the backlog – Asiana Airlines converted its order for eight to -900s – and the A340-200 is gone because the last one has been retired from commercial operations.

CHINA ASCENDANT

None of that says anything about whether or not airlines in China and the Asia-Pacific are set to be leaders in profit terms. But from a global fleet development perspective, Asia-Pacific prevails. Worth noting, too, is that this tidal change in the customer base must, necessarily, affect the aircraft manufacturing industry. This is already happening – to cite only the highest-profile examples, Airbus has established an assembly facility in China and Boeing is following with a completions centre – and of course there is the advent of indigenous competition.

Comac, with its C919 narrowbody and ARJ21 regional jet, is pushing hard to develop the technical capability to hold its own against Airbus and Boeing in its domestic market, and the Chinese airframer will inevitably influence the industry. But it may be a very long time, if ever, before Comac matches the established rivals for engineering, build quality and overall desirability, taking into account metrics such as dispatch reliability and customer service.

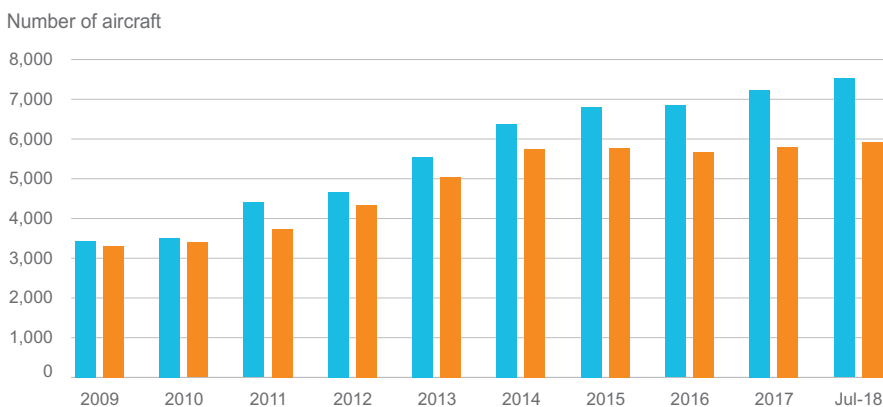

What is certain is that, once established in the fleet figures, Comac will enjoy one powerful advantage that neither Airbus nor Boeing will ever be able to boast: it is Chinese. And, in serving a Chinese market, there will be some benefit in deep knowledge of the local customers and their preferences.

Aerodynamics and flight control algorithms are, of course, indifferent to the preferences of human passengers. But while travellers do not always care much – or indeed notice – what sort of aircraft they are flying aboard, they are very sensitive to its interior specifications and such intangibles as lighting, layout, colour, smell and sound.

In the 1970s and 1980s, Japanese automotive industry executives spent a great deal of time in Europe and the USA to learn what it was that customers wanted from a car. Their early success in selling Japanese cars to Europeans and Americans was followed by stunning success selling Japanese cars designed for – and ultimately by – Europeans and Americans. Aircraft may not be any different. ■

EXPLANATORY NOTES

This census data covers all commercial jet and turboprop-powered transport aircraft in service or on firm order with airlines worldwide, excluding types that carry fewer than 14 passengers or equivalent cargo. It records the fleets of Western-, Chinese- and Russian/CIS/Ukrainian-built airliners.

The tables have been compiled using the Flight Fleets Analyzer database. The information is correct up to July 2018 and excludes non-airline operators, such as leasing companies and the military.

Aircraft are listed in alphabetical order, first by manufacturer and then type. Operators are listed by region, with any aircraft variant in brackets next to the operator's name.

Fleet data comprises the in-service fleet and, where applicable, the outstanding firm orders in parentheses in the right-hand column. In Fleets Analyzer, an airliner is defined as being in service if it is active (in other words accumulating flying hours).

An aircraft is classified as parked if it is known to be inactive – for example, if it is grounded because of airworthiness requirements or in storage – and when flying hours for three consecutive months are reported as zero. Aircraft undergoing maintenance or awaiting conversion are also counted as being parked.

The region is dictated by operator base and does not necessarily indicate the area of operation.

Options and letters of intent (where a firm contract has not been signed) are not included. Orders by, and aircraft with, leasing companies and holding companies – such as China Aviation Supplies – are excluded, unless a confirmed end-user is known. In that case, the aircraft is shown against the airline concerned.

Operators' fleets include leased aircraft.
