

MILITARY SIMULATOR CENSUS 2021

Joining forces to transform training and critical operations support

CAE's acquisition of L3Harris' Military Training business, which included iconic names in simulation and training – Link and Doss Aviation – has now brought together almost 250 years of industry innovation and expertise.

Joining forces, CAE is now the leading pure play, platform-agnostic company focused on simulation, training, and operational support. We are ideally positioned to help our defense customers train and operate across air, land, maritime, space and cyber -- the multi-domain environment.

Explore our expanded breadth of capabilities within CAE's Defense & Security business. And learn how our digitally immersive training and operational support solutions support multi-domain operations.

World in motion

Welcome to the latest edition of the FlightGlobal Military Simulator Census, produced in association with CAE. In the following pages you will find the essential guide to where defence aviation training devices are based around the world, listed alphabetically by aircraft manufacturer and type, as well as by country and operator. Our data has been obtained directly from simulator manufacturers and other public sources, and we believe it to be accurate at time of going to press. We have tried to be as comprehensive as possible, with information on cockpit simulators for aircraft from long-out-of-production legacy types to the latest generation fighters. Largely, we have listed aircraft that are still on the market under their current manufacturer brand, for example Airbus Defence & Space, although there are exceptions.

Our breakdown shows how training devices are distributed by simulator manufacturer, aircraft manufacturer, and country, with CAE's purchase of L3Harris's military training arm set to alter the market share picture

Mega-merger changes the mix

CAE's landmark acquisition of rival L3Harris's military training business for $1.05 billion, which was completed in July 2021, consolidates the Canadian firm's position as the biggest simulator manufacturer. The coming together adds L3Harris's 499 installed devices to CAE's 611, giving the merged business a combined 38% market share.

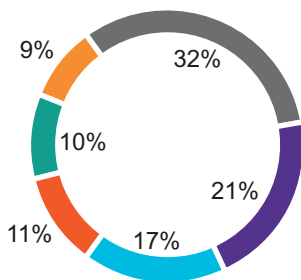

For the first time, this pushes CAE ahead of "other" - traditionally the largest category in a fragmented sector. According to our latest Military Simulator Census, suppliers outside what were the top five - CAE, L3Harris, Boeing, FlightSafety International, and Thales - represent 32% of all military training simulation equipment in operation around the world.

In this year's census, Boeing remains the third-largest manufacturer of simulators, with a market share of 11%. The US airframer is closely followed by FlightSafety International, with 10%, which also plays in the business and general aviation and regional airliner segments, and by French aerospace systems conglomerate Thales, which is strong in rotorcraft, on 9%.

devices simulate broadly represents the size of military fleets, with Lockheed Martin (excluding its Sikorsky subsidiary) in pole position with 632 devices and a 22% share, followed by Boeing, Beechcraft, Sikorsky and Airbus Helicopters. Other manufacturers, though, make up the largest share, at 1,257 devices, or a 44% share.

Country listing

Military simulator share by country also reflects the size of prominent nations' air arms (data from China is almost impossible to source), with 53% of devices – numbering 1,524 – in the USA; and France, the UK, Canada and Russia all with market shares of 5% or less. Almost a third – 32% – of simulators are based outside these states.

While our Military Simulator Census attempts to list who makes every training device, manufacturer and operator are often not the same, and sometimes even the definition of manufacturer can be vague. For the purposes of this survey, we record how the simulator is branded, however aircraft makers will usually outsource much of the production of a training device to a simulator specialist.

One such arrangement is CAE's award in January 2021 from Lockheed Martin of a subcontract to build training devices for the new combined French and German C-130J crew school in Normandy. While CAE will deliver a full-mission C-130J simulator and a fuselage trainer for loadmasters in 2023, the US giant will have responsibility as prime contractor for training when the site opens in 2024.

Militaries may also run their own training schools, with simulation equipment supplied by third parties, but a more common route is for the aircraft manufacturer supplying the aircraft to partner with a simulator manufacturer and training provider, such as CAE, for the provision of training services.

An example of this was the creation in March 2021 by CAE and Leonardo of a joint venture called Leonardo CAE Advanced Jet Training to support the operations of Italy's new International Flight Training School (IFTS). The partnership will provide training services to those flying and maintaining Leonardo's M-346 advanced jet trainer.

The IFTS itself is jointly run by the Italian air force and Leonardo to provide lead-in fighter training to both the air force's own pilots and foreign customers. Work began in December 2020 on a new IFTS campus at Decimomannu air base in Sardinia, where the current school at Galatina in Apulia will be relocated from 2022. ▸

Please note that different militaries around the world use various names for a full-mission simulator. Some of these include operational flight trainer (OFT), dynamic mission simulator (DMS), combat mission simulator (CMS), weapon systems trainer (WST), or full-flight and mission simulator (FFMS). For example, the US Air Force refers to all of their full-mission simulators as "WSTs" regardless if the aircraft platform carries weapons or not, while the US Army uses the term CMS, and the Australian Defence Forces use the term FFMS.

CAE eSeries MR Prodigy Visual System

Unmatched realism for immersive fighter and fast-jet training

Realism and accuracy is paramount when training for high-gain tasks that are difficult or unsafe to reproduce in live flight. CAE's ongoing technological development in visual immersion helps address training challenges such as Controlled Flight into Terrain (CFIT), Air-to-Air Refueling and close formation flying.

CAE's e-Series MR Prodigy Visual System is a 360° visual display (also available in 225° configuration) that meets the specific needs of fast-jet and fighter training. The e-Series MR Prodigy Visual System leverages gaming engine image generation to provide the highest-fidelity and most immersive training experience possible.

The new CAE Prodigy image generator enhances the high brightness, high resolution and electronic collimation of the e-Series display system. The integrated CAE e-Series MR Prodigy Visual System delivers gaming engine visual cueing for safe, cost-effective fighter and fast-jet training.
